

Are you the face of a modern judiciary? Judicial appointments - training and tips for solicitors

The Law Society

9.30am - registration
10.00am - 5.00pm training course
5.5 CPD hours

Overview

The competition for judicial appointments is increasing - the Judicial Appointments Commission (JAC) reported a 40% increase in applications for 2008/09.

The Law Society is keen to equip solicitors who intend to apply with the skills to help them enhance their interview performance. This training course has been developed with solicitor applicants for judicial appointments specifically in mind.

The training focuses on making a positive impact in the JAC's competency-based application and selection process*. Successful pilot courses held in August and November 2009 received overwhelmingly positive feedback.

Now it's your opportunity to take advantage of this unique training experience to improve your understanding of the selection process, and increase your chances of success.

Who should attend?

The course has been designed for solicitors with a minimum of five years' PQE who are considering applying for a judicial appointment. You should consider whether you have sufficient experience to demonstrate that you can meet the JAC's requirements*.

*For further information on the JAC's requirements and the application and selection process, please visit the JAC website www.judicialappointments.gov.uk

The speaker

Manjula Bray is an independent assessor with the National Assembly for Wales (public appointments) and the JAC (judicial appointments). However she will be present in a private capacity and will not be representing the JAC or speaking on its behalf.

Manjula's work is focussed in the area of employability, assisting employers with assessing and selecting the right candidates, and supporting individuals to achieve their best in their careers as a coach. She is a psychology graduate and ex-HR practitioner who has gained experience within a broad range of organisations ranging from SMEs to multinational corporations. Her clients are from the private, public, HE/FE, health and not-for-profit sectors. Working as an independent consultant she develops and delivers learning and development and occupational/business psychology solutions (leadership and management development, executive coaching, psychometric testing and assessment/development centres).
